FOREWORD

The foreword to the first edition of this bibliography contained these words: "The public's demand for adequate housing—especially within older urbanized areas—cannot be met if we neglect the field of neighborhood improvement and conservation."

In the decade since, conservation and revitalization have become principal concepts of urban policy—at both the Federal and local levels. The extent of their influence is apparent in the table of contents.

With the assistance of Phyllis Berry, student research assistant in HUD's Office of Policy Development and Research, the most useful and readily available studies and periodical articles have been assembled under the direction of Helen Boston, HUD Library Senior Bibliographer. Newspaper articles have not been included.

HUD distributes only its own publications, which are separately listed at the bottom of page 105. Those funded by HUD's Office of Policy Development and Research (HUD-PDR) may be ordered from HUD USER, P.O. Box 280, Germantown MD 20767.

All others should be ordered from the publisher, or, in the case of Federal Government publications that say "For sale by Supt. of Documents," order from the U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, DC 20402.
